

MORE OF THE LOST SHIP STAFFORDSHIRE.
ARRIVAL AT BOSTON BY THE SURVIVING CREW, AND THEIR PERSONALITIES.

(From the Boston Herald, Jan. 23.)

The brig Belle, Capt. Meagher, from Halifax 17th inst., arrived at this port yesterday, having on board thirty-three of the crew and six of the passengers of the ill-fated ship Staffordshire. They were sent by H. C. St. John, Esq., of Halifax, the agent for the vessel, sent by E. Train & Co. The following are the names of the survivors of the crew, brought by the Belle:—

A. F. Lee, second mate, A. Woodland, (colored.)
John Morgan, third mate, G. J. Varcoe,
G. J. Churchill, G. J. Churchill,
H. Churchill, G. S. Smith,
Geo. Ward, John Wilson,
B. G. Wellington, G. White,
Wm. Jones, W. Perkins,
W. Whitefield, W. Parsons,
S. R. Foster, W. Foster,
Wm. Wilcox, Daniel O'Neil,
S. W. Barry, S. Sparks,
H. Sherwood, T. L. Davernport,
J. Dury, T. L. Davernport,
J. J. Anderson, Aiden Rice,
J. M. Cobb, W. Carris, (colored.)
Wm. Wood, Jas. Kelly, (colored.)
John Heath (colored) was too severely frozen to be taken over the Belle, and remains at his home.
The passengers of the Staffordshire, brought by the Belle, were:—

Patrick O'Brien, Michael Tally,
John Tally, David Tally,
Thomas Barrett, Mary Jane Sharman.
All the above named persons are in good health, having had a pleasant passage from Halifax.

The Belle also brought, by order of Mr. Fraser, four survivors, survivors of the crew of the schooner John Paul Jones, which was lost off the coast of Nova Scotia.

From one of the crew of the Staffordshire, we learn that after she struck, the first boat left the ship at 1 o'clock P. M.; the second at about 1½ o'clock; third, the longboat, in which was the first mate, at 2½; and the gig, in which was the third mate, and our informant, left at about 3 o'clock.

As the last boat was leaving, the ship was down for ward to her foretop, and when not more than the ship's length off, she was down to her cross-trees—and in a moment, were heard from those on board, and the ship went down.

The stewardess of the ship stood constantly work ing at the pump, with the water nearly to her waist, and calling upons the passengers in the cabin to come to her aid, but she remained quiet. Some one told her to go to the deck, and she did so, and said to the captain that she would go down with the captain. At this time the captain was lying upon the deck in the cabin, where the water was some nine inches deep.

One of our shipwrecked says, in informant, at the time we were in the boat, he could not get in with us. But he is ready, saying, "There are too many in the boat now. So good bye, shipmates, I shall see you no more!"

The steward and the second cook, who left in the long boat, were very badly frost-bitten, so that they were necessarily left at Halifax.

The last boat which left the ship drifted about for thirteen days, when it was taken in by the schooner Express, who took all our board and landed them at Halifax. They were all nearly exhausted as to be unable to help the shipwrecked, and they were all paid on board by the crew of the vessel.

Not wishing, for the entire statement as made above, we give it only as related by a very honest appearing seaman of the Staffordshire, who was in the last boat which pulled away from the ship.
